Rachel Lurya was born in Orange and raised in Irvine; she is the oldest of five children. Rachel is a professional copywriter with extensive training at one of the most successful tech startups headquartered in Silicon Valley.

As the current business owner of one of Orange County's first content-focused companies, Commas and Commerce, Rachel is steadfast in advancing the profiles of public figures with personalized content and exclusive media coverage. Currently, her work has expanded into B2B and B2C social media consulting.

Clients have been featured on iHeartRadio, the Harvard Business Review, OC Weekly, Orange County Register, L.A. Times, YFS Magazine, tech zines, major broadcasting stations, and the podcasting world.

Additionally, Rachel works as the Communications Director for Third District Orange County Supervisor, Donald P. Wagner.

Rachel earned a bachelor's degree in Media Studies/Mass Communications from UC Berkeley and held the highest merit scholarship, the Regents' and Chancellor's Scholarship, for her dedication to community service and academic excellence.

Before attending UC Berkeley, Rachel enrolled at Orange Coast College after graduating high school a year ahead of her peers. As the appointed Vice President of Associated Students, she represented over 24,000 college students. She won the Robert B. Moore Student Leadership Award for making a positive impact on campus, and for her work on the Technology Committee, where she successfully advocated for the implementation of online class registration for efficient enrollment.

Rachel is now a North Tustin resident with her husband and adorable two children. In her limited free time, she publishes poetry under a pen name.
